

The Central European section of the IUSI supports researchers, academics, and students affected by the war in Ukraine

The war in Ukraine is posing serious threat to researchers, academics and students. Most of them had to cease their academic activities, university studies included, while many had to flee their country. The Central European section of the International Union for the Study of Social Insects (IUSI) has many ties to academia in Ukraine and hopes to support our colleagues by coordinating the provision of support, to enable social insect scholars (including students) impacted by the war in Ukraine to continue their lives, work, and careers to the best of their ability under these terrible circumstances. Employment possibilities in research and academia, accommodation, access to research facilities, supervisory support for students, and even access to specific courses in social evolution, social behaviour, social insects are all means to help scholars and students interested in social insects.

For researchers, groups, and institutions offering support

If you would like to help, please enter your information into the google sheet below:

https://docs.google.com/spreadsheets/d/1AVwILTNg79TIHQJ4Aj35a4NvLEa-4utaAaFd_5nvM8M/edit?usp=sharing

If you are uncomfortable sharing this information publicly, please fill in only the support information on the google sheet and add an anonymous identifier instead of the contact name. Then, send the relevant contact information to Tomer Czaczkes (tomer.czaczkes@ur.de).

For scholars, students seeking support

Visit the google sheet below to see what help can be offered:

https://docs.google.com/spreadsheets/d/1AVwILTNg79TIHQJ4Aj35a4NvLEa-4utaAaFd_5nvM8M/edit?usp=sharing

If you cannot access this information, please contact Tomer Czaczkes (tomer.czaczkes@ur.de).